TRAIN KILLS 3 MEMBERS OF FAMILY

Sister of Mrs. R. Coler, Mokena, Daughter and Husband Train Victims

Mrs. Charles McClelland, sister of Mrs. Ralph Coler of Mokena, the former's daughter and her husband, were victims of a train and auto crash at Caldwell avenue and Carpenter road in Edgebrook on the northwestern boundary of Chicago Monday night when the automobile in which they were riding was struck by a Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul and Pacific train.

Mrs. McClelland's body was badly mangled. The daughter was also killed instantly while the husband and father who was fatally injured died Tuesday.

The automobile was torn in two and strewn for hundreds of feet along the right-of-way.

E. Pritchard, engineer, of the train enroute from Madison, Wis., said the automobile appeared to have stalled on the tracks and then was started again, but not in time to avoid being struck. No other witnesses were found. There is a flasher and warning bell at the crossing. The accident occurred about 9:30 p. m.

Mrs. McClelland, 54 years old, was a teacher of mathematics in the Muligan elementary school. Mrs. McClelland was 52 years old. Her daughter was 20 years old and was a stenographer. The McClelland home is on Route No. 1, Palatine road in Arlington Heights.

The McClellands have often visited with the Coler family in Mokena and the news of their tragic deaths came as a great shock.

Mrs. McClelland was the daughter of Rev. W. W. Weedon, pastor of the Christian church in Williams-ville, Ill.

Funeral services for the trio were held Thursday morning in Chicago. The bodies were then shipped to Springfield, Ill., where services were held Friday morning in a chapel and then concluded in Williams-ville in the Christian church with burial in the same place.

Miss Lorraine McClelland who holds an important position in Hollywood, and who is a niece of Mrs. Coler, flew from Hollywood to Chicago and then came to Mokena. She left California at 4:30 p. m. Tuesday and arrived in Chicago at 6 a. m., Wednesday.

Two sons, Kenneth, 29 years old, a mechanical drawing teacher at the Tuley high school in Chicago and Robert 14 years old, survive.

Wabash Railroad Installing Train Order Cranes

The Wabash railroad is having train order catcher stands or cranes installed at Orland Park, Chicago Ridge and Brisbane.

Instead of the depot agent or telegraph operator holding up the usual hoops with the train order attached for the engineer and conductor to catch as the train goes by, the operator places the orders on the crane and an electric light from the depot is thrown on the crane so the trainman can see the orders. One set of orders for the engineer is placed on a level with the cab, and the orders for the conductor are placed on a lower level so they can be easily reached from the caboose platform.

The new system is a great convenience and saves the operator from standing out in bad weather to give the train orders.

A concrete base has been poured at Orland for the new crane.

Award Water Pipe Contract

The Mokena village board at their meeting Tuesday night awarded the contract for furnishing 1800 feet of water mains and accessories, such as fire hydrants, etc., as the village part of the new circulating water system, to the Inland Supply Co., represented by Roy Krapp of Mokena, for $1,522, this company being the lowest bidder.

The water main project is a WPA job. Work on digging the trenches for the mains is under way on Niet-hammer avenue. The first unit of the circulating system runs from the school property south on Niethammer avenue, to the main on Front street.

Last week when digging operations were begun, water pipes now in use were uncovered and were not protected against the cold weather with the result that the pipes froze and a number of village water users were without water until the frozen pipes were thawed out.

Mokena To Vote On Bond Issue

Mokena voters will be asked to vote at a special election, Thursday, December 19th for or against the proposition of bonding the village for $3,000 to pay for the indebtedness incurred in resurfacing streets in the village. Vote "yes" for the bond issue. The bond issue is so small that it will not be noticeable in the taxes.

Wife of Former Frankfort Pastor Dies In Elgin

Mrs. Wilhelmina Dueringer died on Thursday, November 14, aged 89 years, 1 month and 14 days, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Fred Zeigler, 110 Ludehe Place, Elgin, Ill. She had been in failing health for several months, being bedfast for the last three months.

Mrs. Dueringer was born at Rain-kigen, Baden, Germany, on Sept. 30, 1846. She came with her parents to America when she was six months old, making the trip in a sailboat. They came to Illinois and settled on a farm near Ottawa, where she grew to womanhood and received her education in the common schools of that vicinity. She was married to Henry W. Dueringer on January 18, 1868. In the spring of that year the young couple moved to Ford County, Ill., making the trip overland in a covered wagon. They settled on the prairie near what is now Gibson City, Illinois, and began the task of establishing a home in a newly settled community. Rev. and Mrs. Dueringer immediately began the initial steps in organizing a church and were charter members of the Melvin - Roberts German M. E. church, Rev. Dueringer being local pastor.

After five years here, Rev. Dueringer was called to preach at Frankfort, Illinois, and with his family moved to that place. They also served pastorates at Arlington Heights, Peru, Cedar Lake, Ind., and Chicago. Rev. Dueringer's health failed and he resigned from the ministry returning to their farm in the fall of 1882. His death occurred on November 8, 1896.

Mrs. Dueringer moved to Elgin in 1909. Four years ago, because of the infirmities of old age, she closed her home and went to live with her daughter, Mrs. Clara Zeigler.

Mokena Scout Troop And What It Really Means

The essential elements in the Boy Scout program are the Scout oath and law and the ideals of service resulting in the practice of the daily good turn and organized service for others. All scout activities should be regarded as a means of making ideals effective.

In scouting, we believe that attitude of mind is an important element affecting conduct. We believe that a general cultural education and the experience which a boy has as a member of a Patrol or Troop in group activities under properly trained leadership, as well as the high ideals developed in seeking to live by the Scout oath and law and the "good turn" requirement, definitely contribute to giving the boy right attitudes.

Further, the boy's experience as a Scout in doing the things which the program of scouting inspires and stimulates, definitely forms desirable habits of conduct reflecting a wholesome attitude towards life and respect for others and to the community; and that when these acts and attitudes are worked at they result in habits of conduct, and moral fibre, character and a degree of self-control which results in men of character, trained for the responsibilities of citizenship.

I wonder if you have ever had occasion to think it through as I have as to what really is the predominant, underlying human weakness, which is the answer for all wrong doing, whether it be disregard for the rights of others, or a deliberate violation of the laws of the land? Isn't it in some degree an expression of selfishness on the part of the individual? Isn't it an expression of a lack of discipline in

TO HOLD DANCE FOR NEW LENOX LIBRARY FUND

The New Lenox Woman's Club is preparing to start their library in the New Lenox school building. They are now getting things lined up for securing books, magazines, etc.

In order to raise needed funds they are sponsoring a benefit dance at the Colonial ballroom in New Lenox on Friday night, December 13th. The use of the hall has been donated by the owner, A. W. Walsh. The dance tickets have been furnished thru the courtesy of J. J. Cohen of the White Store, Joliet and the publicity by The News-Bulletin.

The Club has made arrangements with the New Lenox Girl Scouts as well as the Boy Scouts whereby they can earn credits for their own groups by doing some work for the library project. The Girl Scouts are to solicit magazines and books for the library and the Boy Scouts are to collect same and deliver them to the school building. All those who wish to donate books or magazines of literary and educational standing may make these donations to Mrs. W. W. Sine, president of the New Lenox Woman's Club which is the sponsor of the project.

An experienced library worker of Chicago has volunteered to catalog the books and to give instructions on the operation and maintenance of a library. The library at Manhattan has also offered to co-operate in every way they can.

Miss Ramona Fink of New Lenox will serve as the librarian. Efforts are being made to have the library in readiness for opening in Feb. The library will be open each Friday afternoon from 2 to 5:30 o'clock until such time as the demands for the library will warrant keeping it open longer. The new project will be a big and valuable asset not only to New Lenox, but to the entire surrounding territory.

We bespeak a liberal support of this noteworthy project and especially the dance mentioned, so immediate funds can be provided to carry on the work. Money donations have been made and will be accepted at any time.

This act of the village board will be much appreciated by the young folks of the community.

Orland Clinic Meets Dec. 11

some instances. How hard it is to realize today that some of our outstanding business leaders, yes, even some of our successful men, because of selfishness and loose-thinking are claiming the right to determine for themselves which laws they will obey and which they will not obey.

Have you ever thought through the effect of the habit of service upon each of us? We in scouting are not so much interested in the kinds of service rendered or the practical help which results from the Scout Good Turn. It is the educational value of the daily good turn and the organized patrol and troop service which comes to every scout in a properly maintained troop program. Every time a boy is led to do something for somebody else in the spirit of service he becomes just by so much, capable of doing a little bit more. He develops an inclination to be thoughtful of others. This is character development and it is citizenship training of the highest order.

In closing I quote the twelve laws by which we are guided: trustworthy, loyal, helpful, friendly, courteous, kind, obedient, cheerful, thrifty, brave, clean and reverent. The oath which every boy must take before he can become a scout is as follows:

On my honor I will do my best:
1. To do my duty to God and my country and to obey the Scout laws;
2. To help other people at all times;
3. To keep myself physically strong, mentally awake and morally straight.

BEDTIME STORY FOR CHILDREN

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

SAMMY JAY ARRIVES

WHEN Reddy Fox arrived at the pond of Paddy, the Beaver, the hunter who was hiding there saw him instantly. So did Lightfoot, the Deer. But no one else did. He approached in that cautious, careful way that he always uses when he is hunting. The instant he reached a place where he could see all over Paddy's pond he stopped as suddenly as if he had been turned to stone. He stopped with one foot lifted in the act of taking a step. He had seen Mr. and Mrs. Quack.

Now you know there is nothing Reddy Fox likes better for a dinner than a duck. The instant he saw Mr. and Mrs. Quack, a gleam of longing crept

Mr. and Mrs. Quack Were Getting Very Near to Where Reddy Was Waiting for Them.

Into his eyes and his mouth began to water. Reddy stood motionless until both Mr. and Mrs. Quack had their heads under water as they searched for food in the mud in the bottom of the pond. Then, like a red flash, he bounded out of sight behind the dam of Paddy, the Beaver. Presently the hunter saw Reddy's black nose at the end of the dam as Reddy peeped around it to watch Mr. and Mrs. Quack. The latter were slowly moving along in that direction as they fed. Reddy was quick to see this. If he remained right where he was and Mr. and Mrs. Quack kept on feeding in that direction, the chances were that he would have a dinner of fat duck. All he need do was to be patient and wait. So, with his eyes fixed fast on Mr. and Mrs. Quack, Reddy Fox crouched behind Paddy's dam and waited.

Watching Reddy and the ducks, the hunter almost forgot Lightfoot, the Deer. Mr. and Mrs. Quack were getting very near to where Reddy was waiting for them. The hunter was tempted to get up and frighten those Ducks. He didn't want Reddy Fox to have them because he hoped some day to get them himself.

"I suppose," thought he, "I was foolish not to shoot them when I had the chance. They are too far away now and it looks very much as if that red rascal will get one of them. I believe I'll spoil that red scamp's plans by frightening them away. I don't believe that deer will be back here to-day, anyway, so I may as well save those ducks."

But the hunter did nothing of the kind. You see, just as he was getting ready to step out from his hiding place, Sammy Jay arrived. He perched in a tree close to the end of Paddy's dam, and at once he spied Reddy Fox. It didn't take him a second to discover what Reddy was hiding there for. "Thief! Thief! Thief!" screamed

"A good season at the seashore," says ironic Irene, "and you begin to wonder which rises the oftener, the tide or the prices."

Sammy, and then peered down at Reddy with a mischievous look in his sharp eyes. There is nothing Sammy Jay delights in more than in upsetting the plans of Reddy Fox. At the sound of Sammy's voice, Mr. and Mrs. Quack swam hurriedly towards the middle of the pond. They knew exactly what that warning meant. Reddy Fox looked up at Sammy Jay and snarled angrily. Then, knowing it was useless to hide longer, he bounded away through the Green Forest to hunt elsewhere.

HE COMES TO CHURCH

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

AT LAST he came to church today; Six neighbors carried him that way;

But, when he passed the portals straight.

Another had to swing the gate, Another open wide the door, For he could open it no more.

But now at last he came in search Of something that they have in church.

The preacher spoke a helpful word, And yet I wonder if he heard, Or, if he heard, he understood? His hearing now was not so good. He was made welcome, for all men Are always welcome, even then; And yet he would have been, I know, As welcome years and years ago.

We all must go to church some day, But some of us too long delay. The words of comfort by our bier We could have come in life to hear, For here to greet us waits a Friend At the beginning, not the end. Religion is for living—aye, To live by, not alone to die.

DISHS THAT ARE DIFFERENT

A CREAM puff pastry is very simple to make, but the baking is the test of its perfection.

Bagdad Cream Puffs.

Heat together one cupful of boiling water and one-third cupful of corn oil. When boiling add altogether three-fourths of a cupful of flour mixed with one and one-half tablespoonfuls of cornstarch and one-half teaspoonful of salt, all well sifted together. Stir and mix vigorously until the mixture leaves the sides of the pan. Cool and add one at a time three eggs, beating well after the addition of each; now add one teaspoonful of baking powder and beat well and drop by spoonfuls on a baking sheet, shaping into circular form. Bake from 35 to 45 minutes, depending upon the size of the puff. Cool, cut with a sharp knife near the bottom of the puff, remove any doughy center and fill with the following:

Cut one-half a package of dates and one cupful of marshmallows with the scissors. Dip the scissors into water to keep the marshmallows from sticking. Chop one-half cupful of nutmeats, add one cupful of cream beaten until stiff, add a pinch of salt and a flavoring of vanilla. This amount will make one dozen large puffs.

NO UPSETS

The proper treatment
for a bilious child

A cleansing dose today; a smaller quantity tomorrow; less each time, until bowels need no help at all.

ANY mother knows the reason when her child stops playing, eats little, is hard to manage. Constipation. But what a pity so few know the sensible way to set things right!

The ordinary laxatives, of even ordinary strength, must be carefully regulated as to dosage.

A liquid laxative is the answer, mothers. The answer to all your worries over constipation. A liquid can be measured. The dose can be exactly suited to any age or need. Just reduce the dose each time, until the bowels are moving of their own accord and need no help.

This treatment will succeed with any child and with any adult.

The doctors use liquid laxatives. Hospitals use the liquid form. If it is best for their use, it is best for home use. The liquid laxative most families use is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Any druggist has it.

SYNOPSIS

As Alan Garth, prospector, is preparing to leave for his mining claim in the Far North, a plane lands at the airways emergency station. In it are Burton Ramill, millionaire mining magnate; his daughter, Lilith; and Vivian Huxby, pilot and mining engineer. Believing him to be only an ignorant prospector, the men offer to make an air trip to Garth's claim, although they refer to his samples of platinum-bearing ore as nearly "worthless." Lilith Ramill, product of the jazz age, plainly shows contempt for Garth. Through Garth's guidance the plane soon reaches the claim site. Huxby and Ramill, after making several tests, assure Garth his claim is nearly valueless, but to "encourage" young prospectors they are willing to take a chance in investing a small amount. Sensing treachery ahead, Garth secretly removes a part from the motor of the plane. Lilith and Ramill taunt Garth, but their tone soon changes when they try to start the plane. Returning to shore they try to force Garth to give up the missing part. Garth manages to set the monoplane adrift and the current carries it over the falls. He points out that he is their only hope in guiding them out of the wilderness. Garth begins the work of preparing for the long journey. He insists that the others help. Ramill and his daughter must be hardened for the hardships ahead in their trek to the outpost on the Mackenzie.

CHAPTER IV

The Whip Hand.

The girl licked her fingers and turned to stare covetously at the pieces of moose dangling in the smudge-fire smoke. She spoke to Garth almost civilly:

"I've no need to rest like Dad. Do I have to wait for another piece?"

"Certainly not. But you'll let the cook-fire go out. Keep this one going, and you can use it. Better cut another spit. Mind the knife edge, if you don't want to lose a finger."

She showed she could be deft enough when she chose. One stroke of the knife hacked off a willow twig, two cuts sharpened the end. Grasping the bottom of the uncut second liver, she sliced up lengthwise, all the way to the rawhide thong. She poked the green wood from the near edge of the fire, piled on dry sticks, and crouched down to hold her spit over the blaze.

Garth had at once begun to make catgut. It would be needed to sew the moccasins. He was intently at work, and the girl was still more intently eyeing her meat, when Huxby came striding between the spruces.

The once elegant engineer was smeared with mud from his midbody down to where the rock-milk water of the ford had drenched the bog slime from his shoes and leather aviator trousers. Snags had scratched his flying jacket and even torn through one sleeve.

Worst of all, his bare face and neck was a swollen mass of mosquito-bite welts and the bleeding wounds of deer-fly stings. The skin had already begun to puff and discolor.

At sight of the man's condition, Garth picked up his rifle. Even the most cold-blooded, calculating schemer can be tortured into crazed violence.

Miss Ramill glanced up from her cooking, and uttered a startled cry. It awakened her father from his doze. He sat erect to start at Huxby.

"My G—d, Vivian, what's happened? You look like something the cat brought home."

"Those d—d pests," Huxby cursed. "Left my headnet. Hey, you airplane thief, fetch me a drink. Jump lively." Garth lifted his rifle. "Put up your hands. No, don't reach for your pistol. Up with them, or I'll wing you—That's it. Now hold them there while Mr. Ramill takes your pistol. I've had enough of your threatening."

The millionaire looked at Garth's cool gray eyes, and heaved himself upon his feet to shuffle around behind Huxby's shoulder. He pulled open the leather jacket and drew the automatic pistol from its high-slung sheath. Holding the butt forward, he brought the weapon to Garth.

"Keep it yourself," Garth told him. "You can give it back to him soon as he gets over this fly madness. There's your headnet, Huxby. Better stand in the smoke till you get it on."

The tormented man first ran to lie down on the rill bank. Between deep drinks, he doused his bitten face in a pool and dashed the gratefully cool water over the back of his neck. The moment he stopped, the pests buzzed at him again. He ran to the smoky side of the fire without stopping for his headnet.

For the first time since Garth had met Lilith Ramill, she showed consideration for someone else than herself. Her second piece of liver had been cooked enough to be eatable. She tore it in two and gave half to her fiancé.

"It's good, Vivian. Try it. You must be famished."

Her unexpected graciousness calmed his half-crazed mind.

"Why, Lilith—you roasted this yourself! It will taste doubly delicious." He forced a laugh. "But I couldn't take the food out of your mouth."

"I'll soon cook more. There's plenty."

Garth caught Mr. Ramill's hungry look, and shook his head. "Not yet for us, sir. We'll pack in some more of the meat before the wolverines get it."

He laid a mat of willow foliage, sliced up what was left of the second liver, and started off with Ramill.

Though at first stiff, the millionaire did not get out of breath so quickly as before. This was an encouraging sign. That easy climb to the claim and the fast return had been violent exercise for the mine investor. He could not have recovered so soon if his heart had been bad.

But when he opened his cigar case, Garth interposed.

"You have only four left, sir. Better hold them back to taper off gradually. This change of diet is going to jolt you hard enough. No wine or whisky, either."

Mr. Ramill walked along quite a distance with the cigar case open, his face impassive inside the mosquito gauze of the headnet. When at last he looked up, he closed the cigar case and handed it to Garth. "You're the doctor."

Garth put the case in his shirt pocket.

"All right, sir. You'll get them when they'll do you the most good—and you'll get them all."

Again Mr. Ramill walked along with his gaze on the ground. They were near the muskeg swamp before he looked up. He turned his shrewd gaze upon Garth, and spoke with blunt directness: "What's your game?"

"My game?"

"Yes. We may as well settle this now as later. Don't tell me you haven't some big scheme in mind. You guessed we meant to cast off and leave you holding the sack. Otherwise you wouldn't have taken that key part from the plane motor."

Garth chuckled. "Did you ever outwit a fox, corner a pack of wolves, or trap a crafty old bear?"

The ruddy face of the millionaire purpled. "What is the connection?"

"Nothing invidious," Garth assured him. "I had in mind only the fun of the game."

"So? Well, young man, it has already been admitted that you've so far taken all the tricks. I gave you credit for more sense, however, than you showed when you cast loose the plane."

Garth Lifted His Rifle. "Put Up Your Hands."

You had no need to walk up like a dupe and permit Vivian to get the drop on you. Easy enough for you to've come out of cover with your rifle up. Don't tell me you'd rather travel afoot to the Mackenzie than fly out in a plane."

"That depends, sir. Perhaps I did not wish to part company with you so soon. Over at the river, I could of course have invited myself to fly out to Fort Smith with you. But that would hardly have given us time to get acquainted. As it is, in the weeks of close companionship to come we may even learn to be friends."

Mr. Ramill frowned. "Is that a taunt, or maudlin sob stuff?"

"Neither."

"Then what's your game? If you think, after marooning us here in these d—d wilds, you can win our friendship or gratitude by guiding us out, you're a sadly mistaken young man."

Garth agreed. "It would be a stupid mistake to expect anything decent from you or your daughter or Huxby. But think what fun I've already had, facing that pistol and telling Huxby he dared not use it."

"Fun? You must be crazy!"

"Not at all. I had him sized up. The game was to let him think he had me trapped, then give him the laugh."

The big man chewed on this. "That's clear enough. But why wreck the plane? Will your next joke be to walk off and leave us to starve?"

"Does it look that way? Two moose make a deal of eating."

As Garth spoke, he pointed ahead at the red chunks on the spruce branches. Almost at the same instant his rifle jerked up. The second shot was followed by a snarling squall. The squall shrilled into a shriek that slipped off into silence.

When Mr. Ramill rather hesitatingly followed Garth to the hanging legs of moose, he saw a three-foot, stub-tailed wildcat with black-tufted ears lying under a torn shoulder of moose meat. A second cat, slightly larger, had leaped several yards away before dropping.

Garth drew his knife. "Only a pair of lynx. Not much for two shots. We haven't any cartridges to throw away. But we can use the skins, and the meat will make a change from moose."

He flayed the bodies, bagged the best cuts of meat in the skins, and hung them high. The next move was to see if Mr. Ramill could pack the hide of the cow moose. He made a game attempt to walk off under it, but at once began to stagger. Garth relieved him of the load, and in place of it gave him one of the bagged lynx skins. He himself bagged one of the bull moose quarters in the cowhide and heaved it upon his back.

They came back to the camp with Mr. Ramill panting and sweating. Garth swung lightly ahead of him. He slipped off his heavy pack and stood looking at the idle couple on the rill bank. They had eaten their fill of liver, and stretched out to rest. No smoke was rising from the embers of the smudge-fire. Flies were beginning to cluster on the moose tongues and other meat.

The girl met his look with contemptuous indifference. "Huxby stared with bloodshot hostility from between his swollen eyelids."

Instead of speaking to the couple, Garth addressed the girl's father as he relieved him of the lynx pack:

"As I remember, sir, I told Miss Ramill she could cook on the smudge-fire if she kept it going. I will say now that I do not intend to shoot any more meat until use is made of what we have. There are none too many rifle cartridges. If the three of you prefer rotten, maggoty meat, I'll go you to the last mouthful. I've lived for weeks at a time on spoiled fish and rotten walrus."

Huxby's face and neck were as swollen and sore as if covered with boils. His temper was no less sore. "You're the one who put us in this fix, you wood louse!"

Garth gave him a pitying look. "That's the fly venom talking. No cool, calculating schemer in his right senses would ask for trouble when his hands were tied. I might point out, however, that the venom was due to your haste in trying to—uh—appropriate my discovery claim."

"That's a lie. You cast the plane adrift. I was stung while trying to save it. Curse the luck! I came within an ace of reaching the snagged line. Almost had it, when the plane dragged it loose and went down over those hellish falls!"

"I might remind you that you ordered me to cast off the line—at the point of your pistol."

The thrust proved too much for Huxby. He sat silent. Garth went on with his quiet argument:

"All that is now past history. We're more concerned with the present and future. Mr. Ramill has shown his common sense by facing the facts of the situation. He has fallen into line. The question is, do you and Miss Ramill throw in with us, or do you go on your own? If with us, I'm to be chief. How about it?"

Huxby had cooled down enough to see the point. "You win. I join up." Miss Ramill looked puzzled and a bit alarmed. "What's the great idea, Vivian?"

"Very simple, my dear. He has the whip hand. He is boss. We must obey his orders, or we'll never get back to civilization."

"Oh! The despicable, cowardly—" She met Garth's cool gaze and fell silent.

He nodded. "You'll begin by rebuilding that fire. After that you'll cook the other liver for your father and yourself. You will then start graining the hair off the moosehides while Huxby and your father go back for more meat."

"I will do no such thing!"

"Very well. That means you get no moccasins to replace your boots when those flimsy soles wear through on the rocks."

She flared. "Gallant Sir Galahad!" "Leave her be, Garth," her father interposed. "I'll tend the fire and scrape the skins."

"No. Lie down. Whenever you work, it's to be on your feet. We must build up both your wind and your muscle. Huxby, I'll ask you to fetch that pot and the gold pan."

The mining engineer rose and started up towards the trough without a word of inquiry or protest. Miss Ramill's eyes widened. She gazed wonderingly from him to her father. Mr. Ramill had no less obediently lain down as ordered.

Garth ignored the girl. He chopped deep notches in the trunks of the food-cache birch trees, about seven feet high. He then cut saplings to span across from tree to tree, with ends wedged in the notches. The next move was to fetch a number of alder poles.

When he returned, smoke was billowing up to drive the flies from the moose tongues and muffs. Miss Ramill had rebuilt the smudge-fire and taken down the liver, ready for slicing. She gazed up at him, stormy-eyed, ready to flare if he had shown the slightest flicker of amusement or gloating.

Instead, he gave her a curt nod of acknowledgment, laid his knife beside the liver, and turned to space the poles across the sapling framework to make a grill above the smudge. Upon this he laid the moose leg and the pieces of lynx meat.

Huxby came back from the discovery stake with the gold pan and little aluminum pot. He stared in surprise at sight of Miss Ramill cooking the liver. She shrugged her slim shoulders, and drew back from the fire to give one spit to her father. After that she silently offered the other to Garth. "Thank you," he said. "Let me suggest that you now fill the gold pan with water and slice into it one of the muffs. They don't look promising. But if simmered for a day or two, a single moose muzzle will give us several delicious meals of what might be called aspic jelly."

This won no sign of interest from the girl. She was no longer hungry. Garth ignored her silence.

"After starting that dish, you may cook as much more of the liver as your father can eat. He will keep on resting while Huxby and I go for another load of moose meat. The sooner we pack all to camp, the surer we will be that other mouths do not get away with it."

He unbuckled his pack, slung the pack-board on his back, and picked up his rifle and belt-ax. Huxby trailed after him out of camp. They walked in Indian file all the way around to the muskeg swamp, Huxby with his gaze fixed coldly upon the back of his leader.

At the swamp Garth cut a tote-pole and passed it through the tendons of two hindquarters of moose. The remaining quarter he strapped to his pack-board. He folded the second lynx skin for Huxby to use as a shoulder pad. Upon it the mining engineer rested his end of the tote-pole.

Giraffe, Tallest Among Quadrupeds of the World

Tallest among the quadrupeds of the world, the giraffe is constructed along a variety of levels, its front legs longer than its long hind legs and its neck longer than the longest of its other members, with a tongue of length and flexibility entirely suited to the architectural whole.

In fact, notes a writer in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, there are evidences in support of one belief that nature must have started to make something else when it got around to fashioning the timid creature. Original plans probably called for a quadruped of conventional dimensions and the barrel and rear running gear must have been completed before amendments were decided on. Very likely the many quadrupeds of comparative size looked too much alike. So it was probably decided this new animal should have a much longer neck, and to make its neck longer than the facts justified it must have longer front legs. So we have an animal started in regularity and finished in singularity, with its body sloping up from rear to front legs and a neck so long that it distorts the distortion.

Nature in all truth must have been in a sportive mood when it made the giraffe. If it sought to give the jungle a laugh it succeeded admirably, giving the laughing hyena something about which it could laugh without restraint.

The beast has to straddle itself all out of shape to get a drink of water from the level of its own feet! So by habit it has taught itself to drink very little water, or at least to drink it with great infrequency. The long neck, the long front legs and the up-tilted body could hardly have been anything but afterthoughts.

River Flows Uphill

It has been figured out by the United States geological survey that a point at sea level on the equator is about 13 miles farther away from the center of the earth than a sea level point at either of the earth's poles. Their calculations show the mouth of the Mississippi river to be four miles farther from the earth's center than its source. Thus, it may be said the "Father of Waters" runs uphill. This phenomenon results from the water in the river obeying the laws of gravity which cause it to run from the higher surface level at its source to the lesser one at its mouth.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Old Maids' Home an Arsenal

Residents of the peaceful Paris suburb of Montrouge were perturbed over rumors that a house in the district occupied by two aged spinsters was a veritable arsenal. Finally the police were prevailed on to investigate. In the house they found 17 military rifles, dating back to 1870, modern rifles, revolvers, rounds of ammunition and even hand grenades.

Lesson for December 8

NEHEMIAH REBUILDING THE WALL OF JERUSALEM

LESSON TEXT—Nehemiah 4:6-9, 15-21.
GOLDEN TEXT—The people had a mind to work. Nehemiah 4:6.

PRIMARY TOPIC—When Friends Work Together.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Team-Work.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Co-operation in Religious Work.

I. Nehemiah's Mission to Jerusalem (Neh. 2).

While performing his official duty as cupbearer to the Persian king, Nehemiah learned of the distress of his brethren at Jerusalem. The walls of the city were broken down, its gates burnt, and the remnant of the captives were in great affliction and reproach. This news greatly moved him. He definitely asked God to give the king a favorable attitude toward his project. In answer to his prayer he was granted a leave of absence from the Persian court and credentials from the king. He journeyed to Jerusalem and made a survey of the city by night without disclosing his purpose to anyone. Having thus obtained first-hand information, he called the representatives of the Jews together and said, "Let us build the walls of Jerusalem."

II. Preparation for the Building (Neh. 3).

The division of labor in this project displayed Nehemiah's administrative ability. A wise distribution of labor makes difficult tasks easy. Observe some outstanding features of his administrative work.

1. He laid stress upon indifference. In administrative tasks it is proper that unfaithfulness should be pointed out. Such action serves as a warning to the unfaithful and encouragement to the faithful.

2. Help rendered by the women (v. 12). It is a fine thing for the women to take hold even in building a wall when there are no men to do it.

3. Stress laid upon earnestness of some (v. 20). Recognition of fidelity will spur one on to faithful performance of his task.

4. Every one built over against his own house (vv. 10, 23, 28). There is no incentive for exertion quite so strong as that which concerns a man's own family.

5. Certain guilds of men undertook certain work (vv. 8, 31, 32). Wise administration sometimes calls for such alignment of efforts. Men of the same class and occupation usually work best together.

III. Hindrances Encountered (4:1-6:14).

1. Scoffing of Sanballat and Tobiah (4:1-6; cf. 2:19, 20). The oppressors of God's servants frequently begin by hurling shafts of ridicule at them.

2. Conspiracy for a sudden attack (4:7-9). When the enemy saw the work was actually succeeding, they changed from ridicule to an attempt to throw the workmen into a panic.

3. Conspiracy with the Jews (4:10-23). They sought, by means of the Jews from the outside, to discourage those on the inside.

4. Greed and oppression of the rich (5:1-13).

The Jews of that day, like the profiteers of our day, took advantage of the poor and oppressed them so that they mortgaged their land and even sold their daughters into slavery.

5. Scheme to take Nehemiah's life (6:1-14). When Sanballat and Tobiah failed in every other way, they craftily sought to get Nehemiah away that they might kill him.

IV. The Wall Completed (6:15-7:4).

So energetically did they pursue their tasks that in fifty-two days the wall was completed. When their enemies saw that in spite of all their schemes the work was actually completed, they were cast down, for they perceived that the work was of God.

Upon the completion of the work, Nehemiah set his brother to rule over Jerusalem and gave instructions as to the opening and closing of the gates of the city. May we learn from this:

1. That though God's children are besought by enemies they should not fear.

2. When beset by enemies we should pray (4:9).

a. They set a watch (4:9).

b. Men were permitted to be with their families (4:13) and would thus fight better.

c. Half worked and half watched, all armed for battle.

d. They worked with sword in one hand (4:17).

e. They slept in their clothes, ready for attack (4:23). Genuine faith is always accompanied with precautionary means.

Looking Heavenward

Mystical more than magical, is that communion of soul with soul, both looking heavenward; here, properly, soul first speaks with soul; for only in looking heavenward, take it in what sense you may, not in looking earthward, does what we call union mutual love, society begin to be possible.

Count Your Blessings

Reflect upon your present blessings of which every man has many; not on your past misfortunes, of which all men have some.—Charles Dickens.

Why and for What Are We Living?

Historian Advises We Stop and Ponder on What It's All About.

"Perhaps it would be a good idea, fantastic as it sounds, to muffle every telephone, stop every motor and halt all activity for an hour some day, to give people a chance to ponder for a few minutes on what it is all about, why they are living, and what they really want."

The historian, James Truslow Adams, is the author of those words. I believe they are great words, which should be passed on to every one who can read them. So says a woman writer of note.

To ponder on what it's all about, why we are living, and what we really want!

If every one of us periodically had an opportunity, or were led by circumstances, such as a complete stopping for a certain time of all activity, to stop and give thought of that kind, what might not be the result?

It might solve all our problems—it might bring us happiness.

Are not all our problems questions of human relationships of one kind or another—of our standing with other people on the road we are so tactically traveling? If we were to stop and think then on what it is all about, wouldn't that larger view inevitably take in the other person's side as well as ours—and so help to solve those problems in personal relationship? If we were to stop and think on why or for what we are living—wouldn't that inevitably make many big things seem too small to bother us, many neglected but easily salvaged things important enough to cherish and be grateful for? If we were to stop and think on what we really want, where we are going, wouldn't we inevitably stop short in the hectic chase and try skipping for as much as possible of the way?

No Stopping This Sheriff When He's After His Man

Minus his trousers, W. H. Westphal arrived in Brownsville, Texas, the other day by train from Chicago in charge of a sheriff's deputy to face a charge of disposing of mortgaged property. The officer, Will Cabler, said Westphal's wife took her husband's trousers, believing Cabler would be "too embarrassed" to travel with a trouserless prisoner, but "that is where she was wrong." "I wasn't embarrassed a bit—because I sat on the seat behind him," Cabler explained. "The passengers snickered a bit, but it didn't bother me. I felt sorry for Westphal in St. Louis, because we had to walk about four blocks to change trains. It was almost freezing and the wind was blowing strong."

Spelling Habits

A Columbia university professor has been keeping score and finds that "regrettable" is our most misspelled word. This is easily explained by the times. In the good old days when there weren't so many things that were regrettable we mispelled other words, notably gorgeous, delectable and irresistible.—Kansas City Star.

Don't Entrust Your Own or Your Family's
Well-Being to Unknown
Preparations

BEFORE you take any preparation you don't know all about, for the relief of headaches; or the pains of rheumatism, neuritis or neuralgia, ask your doctor what he thinks about it—in comparison with Genuine Bayer Aspirin.

We say this because, before the discovery of Bayer Aspirin, most so-called "pain" remedies were advised against by physicians as being bad for the stomach; or, often, for the heart. And the discovery of Bayer Aspirin largely changed medical practice.

Countless thousands of people who have taken Bayer Aspirin year in and out without ill effect, have proved that the medical findings about its safety were correct.

Remember this: Genuine Bayer Aspirin is rated among the fastest methods yet discovered for the relief of headaches and all common pains . . . and safe for the average person to take regularly.

You can get real Bayer Aspirin at any drug store—simply by never asking for it by the name "aspirin" alone, but always saying BAYER ASPIRIN when you buy.

Mrs. Dueringer very early in life made a definite stand toward a Christian life and this step she steadily maintained till the end. She shared with her husband the hardships of the early Methodist circuit rider's life. The cares of a large household fell mostly to her as she performed her tasks willingly and cheerfully.

During her residence here she was an active member of the Melvion Zion M. E. church and of their Ladies' Aid society. She was a worker in the Guthrie Community Sunday school and the W. C. T. U. When she moved to Elgin she transferred her membership to the Elgin Zion M. E. church and was active in that church and its societies as long as her health would permit. To her children and friends she leaves the heritage of a wonderful Christian personality.

She is survived by eleven children: George E. Dueringer and Mrs. Rosa Kessler, Charles F. Dueringer, Louis T. Dueringer, all of Gibson City, Ill.; Oscar Dueringer, of Champaign, Mrs. Minnie Hewson, of Tinley Park, Ill.; Mrs. Jennie Cooper, of Orlando, Fla.; Walter A. Dueringer, Herman J. Dueringer, and Mrs. Clara Zeigler, Elgin; Gilbert H. Dueringer, of Melvin. She is also survived by thirty-five grandchildren thirteen great grandchildren; one brother, Chris Morsch, of Billings, Mont. One daughter, Emma, died in infancy and a son, Dr. H. W. Dueringer, died April 13, 1935, in Elgin.

Funeral services were held on Saturday afternoon in Elgin Zion M. E. church, Rev. Albert Lutz of Milwaukee and R. E. T. Asling officiated. Final services were held at Melvin Zion M. E. church on Sunday afternoon. R. A. Schreiber was in charge and Rev. Asling of Elgin delivered the sermon. Burial was in Gibson cemetery.

All the children were present at the services except one daughter, Mrs. Jennie Cooper, who was not able to attend. Those present from a distance were: Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Dueringer, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Zeigler, Walter and Elmer Zeigler, Elwin Dueringer, Miss Annie Miller, Dr. and Mrs. Douglas Hurley, Chas. Traub, and Rev. Asling, all of Elgin; Mrs. Paul Dixon, Mrs. Wm. McNeely and son and Bert Greener, of Chicago; Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Hewson, of Tinley Park; Mr. and Mrs. Willis Liston, of Orlando; Orris Dueringer, South Bend, Ind.; Mr. and Mrs. Earl Painter and son, of Fooseland; Joe Kessler and Miss Emma Kessler, of Fairbury.

FRANKFORT

Miss Olive Rimers, Mr. Pond of Chicago, Mr. and Mrs. J. Zeeman, Mr. Thomas Collier and F. P. Rison all of Joliet, were guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Rauffaff and L. M. Rauffaff at a six o'clock dinner Thanksgiving Day at their home in Frankfort.

ORLAND

Harold Kinney, who has been a resident of Orland Park for the past ten years, and has been a member of the village board for several years, has accepted a fine position with a large coal company in Pittsburgh, Pa., and left this week to take up the new position.

Mr. Kinney has been engaged in the steel construction business for a number of years, but the coal industry offered him a better opportunity, so he decided to quit the steel business.

Mr. Kinney was a valuable man to the community and his many friends feel the community is suffering a distinct loss by Mr. Kinney leaving here.

The village board now has five members and as there is no village election next spring, the vacancy created by Mr. Kinney's resignation will either be filled by appointment or the vacancy will continue to exist until the next village election.

The village board will meet next Monday night in a semi-monthly meeting.

Will Hold Annual Christmas Concert

The 14th annual Christmas concert of the Joliet Township High school is being rushed to final rehearsals.

Several unique features will be presented on the senior chorus and junior college program December 6 at 8 p. m. Namely, presentation of Christmas Carols with appropriate narration telling the origin of some of the strange but interesting customs that surround the English Christmas.

Not alone will the program consist of traditional material, there is proceeding this a considerable concert of secular and sacred music of miscellaneous character, depicting some fine skill in ensemble singing under the direction of Miss Helen Fuller, director of voice in the High school and Junior College.

The senior chorus consists of nearly one-hundred voices this year, and is augmented for this occasion by the Junior college chorus of 40. The program Sunday, December 8 at 3 P. M., will be under the direction of E. B. Brockett and Arthur Enix assisting.

This program will consist of varied numbers of Christmas music, sacred and secular in character, and with the traditional old carols assisted by the audience.

It has become a tradition in the junior chorus that the lovable Christmas song, "O Holy Night" shall be sung, and each year one or more Freshmen or Sophomore students are chosen to sing the solo of this. For three weeks, students have been industriously working to master this solo for final selection from the competitors who will sing the number at this Sunday evening program.

HIDDEN VALUE!

Prospecting reveals the hidden treasures of nature. Usage reveals the hidden value of a farm telephone. The prospector never knows when or where, if ever, his labor will be rewarded. The farmer, on the other hand, can be certain that his telephone will more than pay for itself. In times of doubt, uncertainty, or emergency the farmer can telephone without delay for advice, information or aid. The total savings and profits which the farmer can trace directly to use of his telephone often amount to more in actual dollars and cents than he pays for the service. Almost every day there is some use for the telephone that will save money. Let these savings grow and they become substantial—they are the telephone's hidden value!

National Topics Interpreted
By WILLIAM BRUCKART
NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D. C.

Washington.—Through some months past, Cordell Hull, secretary of state, has been proceeding cautiously and quietly in the negotiation of trade agreements with foreign nations. His work has attracted comparatively little public attention although throughout the negotiations individual economic interests who stood to gain or lose depending upon their lines of business have made known their feelings quite emphatically. Six of these trade agreements, now called trade treaties, had been consummated in this manner. When the seventh agreement came along, however, the story was different. That was the treaty with our northern neighbor, Canada.

It is impossible here to set forth the list of commercial products encompassed in the new trade agreement with Canada. I doubt if most of the people of this country ever will know details of that treaty. By the nature of things, few persons can be interested in all of the items. But, I do not believe that it is the question of individual interest in the entire list that ought to concern us. Aside from the policy involved in the negotiation and agreement on tariff concessions, the importance of the Canadian treaty to the average individual lies in the one or two, or half a dozen at most, items that affect each one personally.

I do not mean to say that the policy involved is unimportant. The contrary is decidedly true. From a political standpoint, of course, it is general policy that will be debated; from an individual standpoint it will be the direct effect that execution of that policy has on each of us that will determine our ultimate views and to that extent determine whether we will be for or against the general policy of reducing tariffs enacted against certain kinds of imports.

The new agreement with Canada takes effect January 1—provided the Canadian parliament ratifies it. No such ratification is necessary in this country.

Had Free Hand
The treaty was negotiated by Mr. Hull and President Roosevelt under the authority granted by congress in legislation passed a year ago which gave to the President the privilege of working out trade treaties without further congressional sanction. That law restricted the President in only one way, namely, the requirement that an increase or reduction of tariff rates included in those trade treaties may not exceed 50 per cent of the rate fixed in the present tariff laws. So it is seen that Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Hull had virtually complete authority. It will operate for three years and, as far as I have been able to discover, it will be effective after Canadian ratification and there will be nothing anybody can do about it, be it good or bad.

In making public the agreement negotiated by Mr. Hull with Prime Minister MacKenzie King, the President asserted his belief that the agreement will initiate or revive a flow of commerce back and forth across our northern frontier in a manner that will be most helpful. He considered that the agreement would mean additional markets for some of our products and therefore additional work for some of our unemployed. The Canadian prime minister was of the opinion that in this agreement a long step had been taken toward healing a breach that has existed between the two countries for 69 years. He was hopeful, like President Roosevelt, that the channels of trade again will be filled, perhaps not to the levels of the boom days of 1928 and 1929, but would again carry satisfactory volume.

It will be recalled that our shipments to Canada in 1930 amounted to about $900,000,000. The depression cut those shipments to approximately $300,000,000 last year. So, if the predictions of the President and Mr. MacKenzie King are in any way fulfilled, a considerable traffic is due to begin upon the operation of this new treaty.

Any discussion of the treaty, however, that failed to call attention to basic conditions, in my opinion, would be short of its goal. So, it seems to me that while the President and the Canadian prime minister hold such high hope for trade revival, one ought not forget that trade will not flow if no market, no demand, exists for the goods. It may well be that by reducing the tariff duties that must be paid at the frontier on goods enumerated in the treaty that a reduction in prices will follow. It may then follow that the consequent reduction in prices will stir up a demand for the products. But that is not certain.

Now from the political standpoint, examination of the treaty must take into consideration individual items. And how those individual items affect communities and economic interests in this country. Already, we here in Washington have been deluged with the complaints of certain communities against provisions of the treaty. Likewise, we have heard those provisions praised from other sections. Thus, from the political standpoint we see developing a fine old fight over the tariff.

Tariff questions are and always have been sectional questions. Industrial communities want to be protected against inroads of foreign competition where labor is cheaper. Agriculture wants to be protected against imports from bountiful producing lands in those countries where vast open spaces and high productivity exist at the minimum of cost. Importers and consumers of imported products always have fought and always will fight to have low tariff rates so that the things they buy may enter this country at the lowest possible price. With reference to the Canadian treaty, these same conditions exist.

Early outbursts indicate that cattle raising communities and dairy producing sections are up in arms because the treaty reduced a tariff protection accorded against imports of cattle and cattle products and the products of the dairy.

Lumber interests are upset. It is true that the lumber market in the United States has been in the doldrums for several years and naturally the lumber people do not want to have Canadian shipments absorb what little market they have.

These are just a few of the complaints. They are offset partially at least by the praise and the hopes of some other phases of agriculture such as fruit and vegetable growers who feel that they can now market their products in Canada. Without even a careful analysis of the more than seven hundred items involved in the treaty, it is to be seen that there will be possible markets available after January 1 to a number of agricultural lines and to some industrial interests. Yet it remains, as I said earlier, for the passage of time to disclose exactly whether the net result will be favorable to us commercially or whether the Canadians have put over a fine bargain from their standpoint.

All of the discussion about the Canadian treaty, however, brings back memory. As a result of these recollections, I dug back into the congressional debates of 1911 when a Canadian reciprocity agreement was under consideration, backed by the late William Howard Taft. After reading those debates, particularly the observations of the late and distinguished Champ Clark of Missouri and Representative George Norris, now a senator from Nebraska, I could not fail to realize the political dynamite embodied in the new course of international trade relations adopted by President Roosevelt. It was the Canadian reciprocity proposal that defeated Mr. Taft for re-election to the Presidency. It was, indeed, that controversy that caused the organization of the Bull Moose party and that sent Mr. Taft into political oblivion.

I am not predicting here that the same consequences are in store for President Roosevelt but it is fair to recall, it seems to me, that the reciprocity proposal of 1911 burned the fingers of every political leader who touched it. The cases are not exactly comparable nor analogous. Mr. Roosevelt has retained a number of tariff duties which were swept aside in the proposed Taft reciprocity arrangement. He is therefore fortified to that extent. But you may be sure that those who sponsor the present Canadian agreement are going to meet the same sort of fight that was made against the Taft proposal.

Then there is in the current treaty circumstance another factor to be considered. It links back to the Champ Clark observations which were made on February 14, 1911. At that time, Mr. Clark was expressing the view that the reciprocity agreement constituted a step at least in the direction of universal peace. In the debate just mentioned, Mr. Norris asked Mr. Clark to elaborate on his view concerning the value of the agreement as an instrument of peace.

"I wanted to ask the gentleman a question along the line of universal peace," said Mr. Norris. "As I understand it, the gentleman favors the bill for at least one reason—that it will have a tendency to bring Canada into the Union."

"Yes," Mr. Clark replied. "I have no doubt about that. I do not have any doubt whatever that day is not far distant when Great Britain will joyfully see all of her North American possessions become a part of this republic. That is the way things are now tending."

So, if the controversy over the present Canadian tariff agreement becomes violent, I think it is fair to expect that again we will hear the question discussed whether the United States is seeking to annex Canada—to make Canada part and parcel of the United States. Of course, as far as anyone can see today, annexation of Canada is inconceivable but the incident is related here simply to show how far-reaching such controversies may become.

THE FRENCHMEN'S HIDDEN TREASURE

IN SOUTHWESTERN Colorado near the summit of Wolf Creek pass may be seen a finely-shaped hill known as Treasure mountain. It guards a park where gold has been concealed, and many things have happened in its shadow.

To begin at the known beginning, along about 1821 a band of trappers, gold hunters, and adventurers, most of them Frenchmen, left St. Louis and made their way to this section. They ranged about, looking for a place suited to their wants, and finally settled down. They sent to Taos for supplies, and stayed on for several years.

Then, late one summer, they grew lonesome for the pleasures of St. Louis and packed their accumulated gold for a trip to that city. Just as the pack train left camp, a band of extremely unfriendly Utes came by, attacked the men, and killed about half of them. The rest entrenched themselves to fight, and at the same time they managed to bury the gold and make some maps showing where it was hidden. To further locate the place, they blazed several trees with peculiar signs, and also erected cairns of stones at certain points.

At last they managed to get away from the Utes, when they separated for greater safety and agreed to meet at St. Louis. Only two of them ever reached the rendezvous.

Some time later, a Frenchman appeared in a small Mexican settlement in the region of Treasure mountain. He said that he was merely prospecting, but he had some maps which (those who caught a glimpse of them said) looked queer indeed. He kept as much to himself as possible, but the observant Mexicans thought that he was looking for a definite place. In the light of other events, we may suppose that he was the son, perhaps of one of the survivors.

Presently he left the region—at any rate, he disappeared and never returned. But the maps came to light in the possession of some Mexicans, not those, however, who knew the Frenchman.

What these men did with the maps is hard to say. Certainly they kept them well out of sight, but the story leaked out and the general location became known.

A man named Asa Poor heard of the strange maps and the marked cache. He recalled that there was a park where the trees bore just such blazes, and he went back to the place to make certain.

The signs were indeed there, but where they pointed Poor did not know. In hopes of getting some information on the general subject, he then asked the Indian agent for information from the Utes, but the tribesmen professed to be ignorant. They had heard of such a happening, they said, but they remembered nothing.

Poor and a party of friends then tried to work out the puzzle themselves. They followed the blazes one way and another. They looked all about. At last they discovered a mound of earth—but on opening it there was nothing to be found.

Then a visitor came into the park, who claimed that he had seen one of the maps. It had directions written out, he said, and one that he remembered read like this: "Stand on this mound at 6 o'clock on a September morning; where falls the shadow of the head, there dig for the buried treasure." Hopefully, the men did as the visitor suggested, but their hopes died when no gold resulted.

The next summer a man from Durango came with a divining rod. It showed no indication of gold at the place where Poor and his friends had labored so long.

And so the search has gone on from time to time, as confident seekers hunt for the Treasure mountain gold.

$60,000 IN SACKS

PEOPLE who bury treasure surely ought to be considerate enough to leave some indication of its location. A map is always enough to start a treasure-hunt; notes are good, also, especially when they give details; and even word of mouth, although it is likely to suffer monstrous changes in the course of time, is better than nothing at all.

It is truly exasperating to read the story of old Ben Marshall, half-white, half-Indian resident of Oklahoma in the '60s. Old Ben was wealthy—he owned more than 500 slaves, and his land holdings measured over a thousand acres.

When the Civil war started, Ben disappeared, and only after peace had been declared did he show up again, this time in the Chickasaw nation. (What he did during the war can only be conjectured, but probably he did service as a spy.) After a while he returned to his old home, just long enough to dig up $60,000 in gold, sack it and load it in a wagon. He then drove back to the Chickasaw nation and somewhere near Stonewall he reburied his gold.

If he ever told anyone the secret of the location, that person did not divulge it. There were no notes among his few documents that shed any light on the place, and most certainly he made no maps.

Influence Immortal

The men who are gone seem to have left behind them in the world much of their power of vitality; and I suppose hardly a day passes in which we do not do some act, small or great, under this power of inspiration of our predecessors, something we should not have done, or should have done differently, if, even with all the machinery of living and all the truths we know now, we had had no predecessors, had been the first tenants if our earth.—Philips Brooks.

Leaves Over 600 Living Offspring; 5 Generations

Over six hundred living descendants have been left by Engel Dine Janssen, a widow who has died at Esens, East Frisia, at the age of ninety-one years. The old lady had one husband and fourteen children, ten of whom married young, having in their turn an average of ten children apiece. These grandchildren married young in their turn, till at the end of her life Frau Janssen could point proudly to five generations of offspring.

Her family, from children to great-great-grandchildren, was spread over the whole region and beyond it.

The Cultural Expansion

SANTA MONICA, CALIF.—
What a war it has been for education.

They were savages, ruthless and very ignorant. But now they know about the armored tank and the screaming shell and the admirable flame-thrower which cooks the flesh on the living bone. They were isolated.
Dat ole long-distance gun, she sho' kin find you wherever you's at; all she wants is you' home address.
They had barbaric pride—'twas the breath in their black nostrils—but poison
gas would be the cure
for that foolishness.
Like foxes, they den
in the earth. The scout plane spies on them
and the bomber plane comes and makes scrap of their bodies.
Like lions, the naked spearmen advance; the machine gun levels the ranks down flat. Like moles, the fugitives burrow under the mud walls. So, with his high explosives, the white man blasts them out.

Verily, there is no excusing any race,
however remote, however backward, for failure to share in the cultural beauties of this modern civilization.

Joe Robinson's Elegance
SENATOR Joe Robinson, somewhere in Arkansas, Dear Sen.—I hear some of the boys are agin you for re-election because you've been guilty of spats in the first degree. If your homefolks predicate fitness for office on ruggedness of feet, Primo Carnera is their man. But if they want brains at the other end to balance the load, I insist you've got the credentials.

I know how you've suffered. You put on spats, and, just about the time you quit being self-conscious, the weather turns warm on you.

Still, a more tolerant day is dawning. Why, the first time I wore spats in Paducah I needed police protection.
It was a good thing for me I wasn't a Yankee. And on down in the tall timber my wrist-watch was mistaken for a handcuff with a time-lock on it.
I reckon they thought I was a fugitive from a Vassar daisy chain.

Now, just around every corner is a service station, a beauty parlor or a country club. And that, mind you, where once, when a boy came of age,
they had to run him down with dogs
to put pants on him.

So cheer up, Sen. At least they didn't prove a monocle on you. Yours sympathetically, Cobb.

Domestic Accidents
Take Heavy Toll

The automobile with its terrible slaughter of 38,000 people last year exceeded by only a thousand or so the number of fatalities that occurred in homes, according to a report by a large life insurance company. In the entire United States, 34,500 deaths resulted from injuries in the home last year.

These facts were brought out by Mr. Oscar P. Cleaver, nationally known lighting engineer, in a recent address before the New Jersey State Safety Conference. Mr. Cleaver said further: "The risk of injury in the home is almost seven times as great as when riding in public conveyances. Brutal though it may seem 'Home Sweet Home' is one of the most dangerous spots on earth."

"Since 44 per cent of domestic accidents are estimated to be the result of falls, artificial lighting obviously plays a most important part in home safety. In fact, inadequate illumination is a prolific cause of stairway tumbles, especially on the cellar stairs. Porch steps also take their toll. Stumbling over unseen objects in a dark house is generally the cause of needless injuries."

Mr. Cleaver went on to describe the dangers that lurk in improperly lighted rooms, from the front hallway to the kitchen. "The front stairs are itching to trip you up in the darkness... Poor lighting in the dining room is also a hazard, a mental as well as a physical one... In the kitchen occurs the greatest number of painful accidents, such as cut fingers, falls on a slippery floor, and hands injured by cooking gadgets because of insufficient illumination in this household workshop."

The number of accidents in the home can be reduced by care on the part of the family, and by better lighting, Mr. Cleaver concluded. To him the home is no different than the street when accidents are concerned, except that in the former place accidents do not happen—
they are committed. "Light protects the home from many if not the majority of accidents there, and at the same time it safeguards the eyeget your printed message read. That is why we are so careful in the selection of type, paper and ink when we do

Avoid Disappointing It

"The immoderate use of chewing gum may lead to stomach disorders," says a physician. This is easily understandable. When the jaws begin to work the stomach naturally looks for something to come down, and gets peevish if it doesn't.—Boston Transcript.
